Whatever the merits of the strike

whatever the merits of the strike, one thing is certain, that both sides have already lost a considerable sum of money, and that if the struggie is protracted, an alarming amount of real misery and suffering must result. The strike has now been on only a little more than six weeks, and for that reason no great amount of distress has so far been experienced.

Mason, United States Consul-General professionals. Outsiders are waiting for at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in a specia report to the State Department states that American railway securities have fallen in bad odor in Germany, and suggests measures for rehabilitating them in the financial world.

He says that in Frankfort, which was the first European money market to accept United States bonds during the dark days of our war, and where American investments had been popular, not only are our new securities refused be-cause of American origin, but those railroad bonds and stocks held for years have been returned to America years have been returned to America and their proceeds invested in less remunerative Prussian consols and other standard securities, backed by government credit and supervision. The General says:

"The cloud which overshadows American railway securities in Germany has been raised mainly by the revelations of the past two years concerning the management of several railway properties German investors were heavy losers, and their losses served to call the attention of the people and press more sharply than ever before to the usurpations of power and evasions of responsibility which, it is claimed, have become so frequent."

Consul Mason says that the reasons assigned for a several results and the reasons assigned for the service of th quent in American railway management."

Consul Mason says that the reasons assigned for this loss of confidence are the prerogatives and immunities enjoyed by railway Presidents and directors, and to the fact that stockholders' rights are only partially protected by American law, and also that a president or director who has abused his trust may be appointed as receiver of the same property, and under such new mandate continue his previous course, and that the accounts of an entire railway system may be falsified and its securifies sustained in the market by fictitious statements of earnings and concealment of rebates. German bankers and investors insist more stringent legislation must be adopted by the United States curbing the powers of railroad officials and guarding the rights of stockholders in order to rehabilitate American securities at the German markets.
